To whom it may concern:

As Senior Editor at McGraw Hill Professional Computing, my focus is on technology publishing for multiple points in a professional career—whether that be self-paced learning to keep up with the latest skills or preparing for a professional certification. While developing content for the AWS certification market, I have worked with Rajat Ravinder Varuni as the Technical Editor on multiple projects.

I am writing to give my highest recommendation on behalf of Rajat as a Technical Editor and also as a demonstrated leader. Rajat not only expertly performs the role as defined but goes beyond the specified responsibilities. The role itself requires deep technical knowledge encompassing the breadth of AWS services and extending to the certification exams themselves. Rajat gives deeply technical feedback to ensure the accuracy and relevance of the content in a professional, tactful manner. In addition, he provides input at a higher level to make certain our approach best positions AWS technology and fits the needs of the intended customer. By approaching the content with his relentlessly high standards, Rajat has undoubtedly guaranteed the publication of the best possible content.

On a recent endeavor, Rajat took it upon himself to find an all-star author team after the original author unexpectedly left the project. That was, to say the least, far beyond the role he signed up for, but he believed the project was worthwhile and saw that it would likely not make it to market without his help. It does clearly demonstrate his dedication to use his resources to see a project through.

It has been my pleasure to work with Rajat, and I hope to have more opportunities to do so in the future.

Sincerely,
